

Torn Letter Spread Plan

Blue Box Journal — Video 3

Quick Guide for Viewers

QUIET
ARCHIVES

Story Summary

- Grace's missing letter has finally arrived.
- Mr. Bell brought it after the Great Rain.
- The letter was soaked, torn, and only partly saved.
- Grace carefully keeps the fragments to preserve what she can.

What to Look for in the Video

- I show the full letter first.
- Then I tear the letter to create the pieces.
- You'll see how I tuck one fragment into the pocket.
- I arrange the remaining torn pieces across the facing page.
- It's a simple, layered spread that helps tell the story.

Project Tips

- Use real or printable letters, journaling paper, or snippets from the kit.
- Tear the edges for a natural, aged look.
- Tuck one piece into the pocket.
- Arrange the rest across the page so it feels rescued, not too neat.
- Add a little inking if desired.

You Can Make This

- This is a beginner-friendly project.
- Use what you have — no special supplies needed.
- Let the torn edges and the layering tell the story.
- It's a beautiful way to add story and depth to your journal.

Tuck one letter fragment into the pocket.

Show the full letter first, then tear it on camera.

My dear Grace,
I hope this finds you well, despite the rain...

Correspondence

My dear Grace,
The rain was fierce on the road, and my letter has suffered for it. I hope that some of my words still reach you...

me... could not to the storm... but I send this to you...

Please know that I am... thinking of you...

...always with you...

Let the torn edges help tell the story.

Arrange the rescued pieces across the spread.

Yours always,
E.